The structure is significant because of its association with the Third Haven Meeting House and the Friends of Talbot County. Although it gives the appearance of being quite old it was constructed in 1867, after an earlier "sexton's house" constructed between 1823 and 1828 burned. The present cottage apparently stands where the earlier one did.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This small cottage stands east of the Third Haven meeting houses, it faces south.

The two-bay frame structure has a central entrance door. It is covered by a steeply pitched gable roof; the building is one-and-a-half stories in height.

Windows have six over six sashes and very narrow trim with a bead. Shutters have been removed. The door frame is also narrow with a bead; a four-panel door is used. There is a small window with a four over four sash in the west gable. It has an unmolded frame and appears to be an addition.

The enclosed chimney rises inside the west gable end; it is brick, square with a corbelled cap. A box cornice without decorative moldings and an undecorated, but tapered barge board are also used.

The structure is covered with white painted wooden shingles over the original weatherboard. The roof is covered with shingles and tin. There is a shed addition to the rear.

The building is in stable condition; it is now used as a storage facility.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The structure is significant because of its association with the Third Haven Meeting House and the Friends of Talbot County. Although it gives the appearance of being quite old it was constructed in 1867, after an earlier "sexton's house" constructed between 1823 and 1828 burned. The present cottage apparently stands where the earlier one did.

According to the minutes of Third Haven Meeting, a sexton's house was needed because the Meeting house had "at different times suffered considerable injury for want of a person living convenient to take care of it". This notation was made in 1823; by 1828 a "small house" had been constructed and was used until it burned.
